Dear Mr. Hanover,

Enclosed are the FBI reports I promised you in our phone conversation Sunday morning. They are not as clear as they could be because the copies in the files of the Warren Commission are remote xeroxes. The incomplete page was incomplete in the copy supplied me.

There is nothing improper in your having these. I did not steal them. The government xeroxed them for me.

History sometimes gets rewritten, therefore I think you and James Lawrence should have these in your own interest.

He tried to phone me collect the other night. However, I was not home, as you know. I'd like to talk to him. My wife didn't accept the call because she had no idea who he is. Even if she did, it would have served no purpose. She knows nothing about that matter.

When you are in touch with him, please ask him to phone me some night after 7:30 p.m., when I am most likely to be home. If I am not, my wife will not accept the call. He left no number, so I cannot return the call. If he leaves a number, should I not be home, I'll be able to call him back when I return.

I hope you had a chance to discuss our conversation with him so he will have been able to search his memory.

On these pages, "CD" represents "files", that is Warren Commission files. They used that designation to identify what they called their numbered files. Sometimes, when the government xeroxed these, the page numbers were accidently cut off, as with the Lawrence files. The larger numbers at the bottom of the Neeley pages are the page numbers. In the event you are ever in touch with her, I'd like to hear from her.

I do hope our conversation did not intrude too severely into your business affairs. Thanks very much for your time.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
